"I'm a Mugwump in politics. I vote both ways, and during the eleven years I have lived in New York I have always supported the best man, no matter what his platform."

Mr. Constable's manner is that of a man who will stand by his convictions. For several years he held a managerial position under William Whartun, the Philadelphia contractor, and from his youth up has occupied executive positions where it was necessary to supervise the work of large numbers of men.

Mr. Constable has for long been general manager of the City Improvement, Society, and admits that his connection with that organization has made him many enemies among the Tammany crowd of office-holders.
